I am Kelli Servizzi and I am an Assistant Professor of Special Education. I received my Bachelor’s degree in Journalism and my Master’s degree in Special Education from Butler University, and another Master’s degree in Educational Administration at Ball State University. I then obtained a Ph.D. in Elementary Education from Ball State. Along with my degrees, I am belong to a number of professional associations including International Reading Association, Indiana Association for the Education of Young Children, National Association for the Education of Young Children, Council for Exceptional Children, Literacy Research Association, Association for Literacy Educators and Researchers, Association for Childhood Education International, and the National Association of Special Education Teachers.

At IUK, I co-advise the education student organization, EdSAC. I chose IUK because of the sense of community, both on campus and in the region. I have the wonderful opportunity to work with students in the classroom and in area schools during field experiences. IUK students are frequently seen collaborating with one another in common areas or dropping in their professors’ offices to chat. The flexibility of the campus and program offerings allow learners of all ages to pursue and obtain a quality degree and prepare to be tomorrow’s leaders.
